

TransportationCamp brings together people working at the intersection of innovation and transportation issues for a day of “unconferencing.” Since the original events in New York City and San Francisco in 2011, TransportationCamps have taken place in multiple cities, attracting thinkers and doers leading the transportation and tech worlds.

TransportationCamp New England 2015 is the second TransportationCamp held in New England. Taking place on Saturday, April 11th, TransportationCamp will attract 300 participants, including students, professionals, and transportation and technology enthusiasts. The event will channel the wealth of people, ideas, and organizations into a productive day of participant-led sessions.

“Cambridge Systematics is delighted to be organizing a day filled with unexpected conversations and meaningful discussions at the unconference.”

Eric Ziering, Cambridge Systematics, Inc.

TransportationCamp New England examines ways to build connections between disparate innovators in public administration, transportation planning, transportation operations, information design, and software engineering.

We invite you to support TransportationCamp as an attendee or a sponsoring partner. Registration information can be found at www.transportationcamp.org.
